Uppsala Economics Association has decided to award Eva Pia Eriksson a stipend of 8 000 SEK from Ingemar Carlsson's Memorial Fund for showing particular aptitude for economics, based on the completion of her Master's thesis "The effects of input subsidies on household welfare - A study of farm households in Tanzania".

By employing advanced econometric methods, Eva Pia was able to perform rigorous analyses that contributed to her objective assessment of a debatable government policy. The paper also opened the door to future research by admitting the limitation of data volume, which is not an uncommon problem in economic science. Overall, the paper exhibited a commendable grasp of technical expertise and potential for further success in academic research.
